John H. Cochrane is a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution and the AQR Capital Management Distinguished Service Professor of Finance at the University of Chicago's Booth School of Business. He is also a research associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research and an adjunct scholar at the CATO Institute.

Before joining the Booth School in 1994, Cochrane was at the Economics Department of the University of Chicago. He earned a bachelor's degree in physics at MIT and a PhD in economics at the University of California at Berkeley and was a junior staff economist on the Council of Economic Advisers (1982–83).

Cochrane's recent publications include the book Asset Pricing and articles on dynamics in stock and bond markets, the volatility of exchange rates, the term structure of interest rates, the returns to venture capital, liquidity premiums in stock prices, the relation between stock prices and business cycles, and option pricing when investors can't perfectly hedge. His monetary economics publications include articles on the relationship between deficits and inflation, the effects of monetary policy, and the fiscal theory of the price level. He has also written articles on macroeconomics, health insurance, time-series econometrics, financial regulation, and other topics. He was a coauthor of The Squam Lake Report.

Cochrane frequently contributes editorial opinion essays to the Wall Street Journal, Bloomberg.com, and other publications. He maintains the Grumpy Economist blog, which can be found at <http://johnhcochrane.blogspot.com/>. His personal web page can be found at <http://faculty.chicagobooth.edu/john.cochrane/>.
